

- You are to submit a page of notes (as a link to a separate web page) with information about how you made the site, including the following content:
- Any notes about the design process (What's your current portfolio goal? What kind of audience are you going for? Ideas about what you would like to include? How are you organizing your content? Include an image of your design sketch.)
- Source information for any images that you didn't create yourself and any typefaces you use.
- Notes about the design such as image dimensions you'll need, special notes about how to make updates, things you plan to add for the final version.

My current portfolio goal is to show off my work to potential employers. With the hope to land myself a coop over the summer. I am going for potential employers as my audience. I would like to add my games in the future as right now I just have placeholder items. Preferably at least 2 personal and 1 school project. I organized my content based on what I want the employers to see first. And what looks the nicest on the page in terms of layout. I used placeholder.com for my game images for right now as I don't have anything to add to them just yet. Adding new content shouldn't be that difficult as everything was set up in a way to make more content easy to add. Mostly just adding an article will do the trick. In the final version i would like to have a better photo of myself, as i don't take pictures of myself ever, and add the games as mentioned earlier.
